Background information

Singapore Organisation of Seamen (SOS)

The Singapore Organisation of Seamen (SOS) is a global maritime trade union commissioned by the National Trade Union Congress (NTUC) to promote good industrial relations between seafarers and their employers (shipping companies).

Since its establishment in 1971, SOS has been actively representing seafarers in unfair treatments in the shipping industry such as piracy, unpaid wages and substandard living and working conditions - through the Collective Bargaining Agreements with the shipping companies that employ them.

The union's strong tripartite affiliation with the local, regional and the international maritime community, such as the Maritime and Port Authority of Singapore (MPA) and the International Transport Worker's Federation (ITF) has also benefitted its members – which have grown to over 20,000 locals and foreigners.

In 1994, SOS with the NTUC founded the Seacare Co-operative, an economically viable enterprise that further fulfills the obligations of SOS. With its own family of business enterprises, the co-operative assists local seamen who have been displaced from their jobs (due to automation and the use of Flag of Convenience vessels) through training grant schemes, work opportunities and investment projects.

SOS's mission:

- To promote employment opportunities as well as good industrial relations.
- To assist and encourage local seamen to retrain and upgrade themselves in a competitive employment market.
- To help and ensure all seamen, including foreign seamen, receive their just reward for their hard work.
